My Dear Mrs. Gray,

In due time I reached home, and have fallen into the groove of business as comfortably as a boy tumbles from his bicycle. I can scarcely imagine that I have been away down east even to the city of Boston, for every thing goes along as of yore, and my absence certainly did not impede the progress of the seasons or interfere with the "procession of equinoxes". One lady in Sunday School yesterday ^{said} thought it was very convenient to have me back; another wished to assist by saying pleasant as well as convenient. Whether the amendment was adopted or not I did not stop to ascertain. One thing however I am quite confident of: I had an excellent visit at Harvard, and I feel very thankful.

ful to the friends there who made it-possible for me to enjoy it. At present I can but wish you the richest of blessings.
I wish I could send you a good slice of our lovely weather that we are having just now - in fact almost ever since my return.
It does seem a real comfort and both "pleasant" and "convenient" to have such a "glorious climate." In coming home I traveled one night and part of a day between Cheyenne and Ogden in snow drifts and a heavy snow storm. So that when I got home my voice was sub-base and my head a bare ball in sensation, (ie, as I imagine a bare ball feels after being clubbed) I had so much cold that I could spare a large share for my wife and daughter which they have been enjoying ever since. Washik & generous?

That lunch basket and glass of quince marmalade were substantial things that I will not soon forget - unless I forget the happy things, and the good things, before I do the evil ones. The evil men do live after them", we are told; some wicked fellow punched a hole in the basket in the wicked city of Chicago, and that hole I brought with me, and I shall always remember that in association with the good things in the basket - and may it not be a good thing that evil done to the basket - if it should only serve as a ^{continual} reminder of the donor of that basket and the quince marmalade! But I am sure now that I do not need such a see minder.

I imagined I could see Dr. Farlow and Prof. Watson holding on to their hats and cars during the late blizzard in the east that the paper tell ~~is~~ about. It must have been a fearful storm. Did you feel it at Cambridge very much?

Excuse so much nonsense. I only intended to announce my safe arrival at home, and express my thanks for your kindness.

Kindly regards to Prof. Watson and Farlow and Miss Gray, and please accept the same for yourself.

Hoping to hear from time to time of your welfare.

I remain sincerely

Yours friend
